Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette. WARRENTON, Sept. 29 -The trial of Jas. Green, charged with the murder of Quinton Springs, on the 231 of August last, was commenced before the County Court on Monday. James V. Brooke and D. A. Ratcliffe, esqts... appeared for the commonwealth, and Messrs. company with several gentiemen from War-R. E. Scott, Chilton, and Shackelford for

The case has excited the deepest interest throughout this vicinity, and at an early hour had heard some one making a noise previous the court house was filled with a growd of to the fight, but paid no attention to it-nad eager listeners. It shall be my object to give you a concise and correct report of all the for the present, and witnesses for the defence evidence taken during the trial, omitting were examined.

The case was opened by Mr. Brooke for the prosecution, who elaimed the privilege of saying a few words personal to himself. He did not desire his position to be misunderstood or misrepresented. He was here as prosecutor by appointment from the Court, and was actuated by no vindictive feelings. The Commonwealth's A torney, for good and sufficient reasons, had been excused from prosecuting the case, and as far as he could, he would conduct it in a spirit of fairness and courtesy. The gentleman then went on to detail the circumstances as he expected to prove them, and to lay down the law governing the Court in the case. He was followed by Mr. Scott for the defence, who made an able address to the Court. The speeches of these gentlemen occupied the entire day, and at 6 o'clock the Court adjourned.

was crowded as on the day previous, and the examination of witnesses was commenced by the Commonwealth. Walter H. Ratcliffe, (sworn) .- Monday night, after the ball at the Springs, hearing a noise in Rowdy Hall (as the geotlemen's hotel at the Springs is called,) went to the building, and met Carver in the passage near his own room door. C. was cursing and damning the Greens-said be could and would whip them. Witness, who roomed with Carver, tried to persuade him to and exclaimed, 'Here comes the man I want. Green was on his way down the steps, and kept on his way, meeting C. at the bottom. They simultaneously laid hold upon each other. Green had the knife in his hand when they seized, and immediately plunged it into C., the latter striking G. once or twice after receiving the wound. They struggled till near C.'s room door, some four yards from the steps. I caught hold of Green and tried to pull him away, but could not do so. C. fell and died immediately. Mr. Fant, a justice of the peace, came to my room to search for weapons. He found a pocket knife lying under a chair, where deceased had thrown his coat and vest. (Witness here recognized the knife.) In the early part of the evening saw the knife lying upon the bed with C.'s pocket book. At the instance of some one I put the pocket book in my pocket, and left the knife upon the bed. When Mr. Fant and myself went into the room, C. was lying dead in the passage, and the servant was making up the bed. I examined the deceased for weapons. but found none, Mr. F. being present when I examined. Mr. F. asked for the keys of my trunk, but I told him he could not have them, as he had no right to look into my private papers. When I first went to the house, C. was very much intoxicated. We both had our clothes in the same trunk. C. was in his shirt sleeves, having taking off his coat. vest and boots. There were no weapons of any kind in the trunk, and had been none, as I had the key. We had no weapons at any time during our stay at the Springs, as all I

I informed G that C intended to cane him. A few minutes after, they met in the passage, between the buildings, when I heard C say "defend yourself." They were parted before I reached the spot. I picked up an open pecket knife on the spot, which young Ratcliffe said was C's. G had at the time a stick in his hand, somewhat larger than C's. The flames rapidly communicated to the mill and the whole concern was burnt down. The property, machinery, &c., belanged to Messrs. Warwick & Barksdate of Richmond, and may be valued at between 15 and $20,000. It was fully insured. The mill was rented Messrs, McGruder, whose less (some 10 or $12000) is also covered by insurance in Richmond offices. Among the property consumed, were about 900 burrels of flour and about 4.000 bushels of wheat. Very little of anything was saved. All the loss falls on the insurance companies .-- Richmond Eng.

owned were left in Washington, at my father's house, where Carver was staying. I was examined as witness at the coroner's inquest, and saw the knife used by Green-it was what is called a California knife, blade

5 or 6 inches long, and 1t inches in breadth. C. had been staying at my father's house in Washington, since May. C. carried no weapons to the Springs-had nothing but a small cane which we brought from home with us. After C.'s return from Washington, where he went to fight a duel with G., C. carried this cane. My attention was attracted to C. on the fatal night, by his load noise and curses of Green, which he kept up until I heard him say, "here comes the man I want." I am certain he did not cease his noise at any time after I saw him. The passage was well lighted with a lamp. When I first saw G.

descending the steps, he had his hand towards his bosom. When they seized, I distinctly saw the knife in his hand. Cross-examined .- Both deceased and myself used the same room and trunk I did not deny at the Coroners inquest that I refused Mr. Fant to search my trunk. I am 18 years old, and first cousin to the deceased When I heard C. making the noise, I did not know that G. was up stairs, or in the same building. When I first saw G. he was running down the steps. Both parties seized at the same time, G with the knife in his hand. After the wound from the kmfe, I saw C. strike at G. once or twice. C. had often said he could and would whip Green. The same day of G.'s return from Washington, C. attacked bim with a cane. He said that G. had caused him to be arrested in Washington, thereby preventing the duel, and he meant to whip him for it. The attack was made in the street between the two main buildings. Heard C. say on the faral night that be could and would whip G. | Witness was here asked if he had not himself had a difficulty with with C. The presecution objected to this question and after argument on both sides, it was ruled out by the Court. | -Deceased has told me that he had a duel in the South. I wrote the challenge that C. sent to G. previous to their departure for Washington to fight, but did not bear the challenge nor accompany them to Washington. Was present at the first cause of the difficulty, which occurred at the card table. I was partner of C.'s in the game, which was "seven-ur," Green turned up a Jack, and C.

said several times "you have counted that

Jack." G. replied that "any man who accused him of cheating was a d-d rascal."--

The game was played out, when C. com-marking that they would settle it in the morning. Both had been drinking, and I tried to prevent a difficulty. When morn-
